Nestled in the neighborhood, this Mediterranean restaurant captivates patrons with its warm and welcoming staff, consistently earning top marks for friendliness and service. Guests frequently commend the enthusiastic owner and attentive employees, who enhance the dining experience with personalized recommendations. However, the food is a point of contention, with complaints about portion sizes and quality—particularly the overpriced tabbouleh and occasionally dry falafel. While some diners enjoy generous portions and tasty dishes, others suggest seeking alternate options for falafel. Overall, the restaurant shines in hospitality but struggles with culinary consistency.
