Despite its once-stellar reputation, recent visits to Hong Kong Chippy reveal a decline in food quality and portion sizes. Diners have reported dry, tasteless dishes, with inadequate descriptions for those with dietary restrictions. While some customers reminisce about enjoyable meals and recommend popular items like salt and pepper chicken, others express frustration over inconsistent experiences. Charges exceeding advertised prices and a lack of variety in the buffet have further tarnished its image. Overall, while the establishment retains a loyal following, many are reconsidering their patronage amid growing disappointment.
